You know those moments...
when everything felt so impossible?

*Somehow you got through.
Did it make you a better person or a bitter person?*

*So now you get to decide.
When it happens again, do I need a new plan?*

Remember What You Want.
Remember What You Can Do!

CREATING CALM & STILLNESS

WHEN WE'RE DYING TO FREAK-OUT

"Life goes by fast. Enjoy it. Calm down. It's all funny." –Joan Rivers

"Holding on to anger is like grasping a hot coal with the intent of throwing it at someone else; you are the one who get burned." -Budda

Calm

- Creating perspective and mindfulness while managing emotional reactivity.
- Be slow to respond and quick to think. A panicked response produces more panic and more fear. "Anxiety is extremely contagious, but so is calm." The question becomes "Do we want to infect people with more anxiety, or heal ourselves and the people around us with calm?" If we choose to heal with calm, we have to commit to practicing calm. Small things matter. For example, before we respond we can count to ten or give ourselves permission to say "I'm not sure. I need to think about this some more." It's also extremely effective to identify the emotions that are the most likely to spark your reactivity and then practice non-reactive responses.
- Unless we had calm modeled by our parents and grew up practicing it, it's unlikely that it will be our default response to anxious or emotionally volatile situations.

Breathing

- Is the best place to start at times... just taking a breath before we respond slows us down and immediately starts spreading calm. Sometimes actually thinking to ourselves, "I'm dying to freak out here! Do I have enough information to freak out? Will freaking out help? The answer is always no.

Stillness

- From meditation and prayer to regular periods of quiet reflection and alone time, men and women spoke about the necessity of quieting their bodies and minds as a way to feel less anxious and overwhelmed. Stillness is not about focusing on nothingness; it's about creating a clearing. It's about opening up an emotionally clutter-free space and allowing ourselves to feel and think and dream and question.

Fear

- Once we can let go of our assumptions about what stillness is supposed to look like and find a way to create a clearing that works for us, we stand a better chance of opening ourselves up and confronting the next barrier to stillness: fear. And it can be big, big fear.
- If we stop long enough to create a quiet emotional clearing, the truth of our lives will invariably catch up with us. We convince ourselves that if we stay busy enough and keep moving, reality won't be able to keep up. So we stay in front of the truth about how tired and scared and confused and overwhelmed we sometimes feel. The irony is that the thing that's wearing us down is trying to stay out in front of feeling worn down. This is the self-perpetuation quality of anxiety. It feeds on itself.

Sorting Through the Mixed Messages

- From very early on in our lives, we get confusing messages about the value of calm and stillness. Parents and teachers scream, “Calm down!” and “Sit still!” rather than actually modeling the behaviors they want to see. So instead of becoming practices that we want to cultivate, calm gives way to perpetuating anxiety, and the idea of stillness makes us feel jumpy.
- In our increasingly complicated and anxious world, we need more time to do less and be less.
- When we first start cultivating calm and stillness in our lives, it can be difficult, especially when we realize how stress and anxiety define so much of our daily lives. But as our practices become stronger, anxiety loses its hold and we gain clarity about what we’re doing, where we’re going, and what holds true meaning for us.
